As it turns out, coffee makes a pretty good replacement for my girlfriend. In fact, if they could just figure out a way to put boobs on a styro-foam cup, I'd be set. On the other hand, Sam doesn't stain or make me

shit. SCIENTISTS TAPE SCREAMS OF THE DAMNED ON SATAN'S PLANET!

She hates coffee. I'm not sure just why...

WHAT THE EXPERTS HEARD

"Help me, Momma!" "The fire's in my bones." "Remove the sword from my bowels." "My eyes — give me back my eyes." "Water. I thirst." "I'm crushed underfoot." "My ski melts." "Oh my God."

X: What would you like to see coming out of Alameda, or the East Bay, or just in general in the next few years?
 J: A movie theater, and a place where bands could play. There should be more, kids shouldn't have to travel an hour to do shit.
 The only guy I know who's trying to organize an all ages thing wants to do it under the auspices of a church, so it would be cool if, ideally there was a movie theater and a place where bands could play.
 (The rest of the tape is mainly Joe following the local crack baby and talking about his cat named Assworm.)

Some place where the people are sweet and deserving. There's also a place in Santa Ana that's awesome, it's a youth-run volunteer place. It's really really cool, the kids there are really really sweet and enthusiastic and productive. It's not often that you see youth-run run stuff that is really together, and they are together. Gilman Street is another. It's very very rare that places like this exist, and it's awesome when they do.

X: Did you have any bad experiences when you first started out (with the package) or even now?

A: Bad like...?

X: Bad crowds, or just bad individual reactions?

A: Even when people hate it it's still kind of fun. I don't know, I can hold my own if I'm being heckled if I'm in the right mood, so it's fun for me in that case too. No, I don't think I've had any terrible experiences. People scream at me and tell me I suck, but I'd rather have that than people just stand there and not care or be bored. So it's fun for me when people hate it too. It's not like I get angry or my feelings hurt. I mean, it's not for everyone, it's like "okay, that's fine if you don't like it, but let's verbally spar."

X: Before the package you were in a band called "Fracture," and you still have some CDs from that project. Why did they break up?

A: We're from Philadelphia, and our singer moved to Washington state, so that was kind of the end of it. I mean, I still like the guys.

X: Would you ever want to go back to playing with a regular band?

A: I don't know, I do miss playing with other humans, and I do miss traveling with other humans some times. It's still fun, but it's a different kind of fun. I kind of miss that "you and four friends vs. the world" feeling.

but it's a lot easier to be productive when I'm by myself. If I want to go on tour, I just go. I don't need to arrange a schedule between five people. I don't need to pay for five people, it's just me. It's a lot easier to be very self-reliant and you don't have to deal with anything that comes with having a large group of people.

X: So what's the strangest thing that people have done at your shows?

A: There've been some really funny shows. One in Lawrence Kansas where this band called "Killed in the Face" just ran up when I was playing and just started playing the snare drum and trombone and they were all dressed in costumes and they played a couple songs, and that was pretty strange and awesome. In Redmond there were a few people who dressed up in "Prophets of Atom" t-shirts and had fake beards and signs that said "the package is near." and they were yelling at people and getting rocks thrown at them, which is pretty funny.

X: You actually have a Mad Lib song, right?

A: Uh huh.

X: And Worm Quartet did a version of it. Is this a thing where everyone can do a Mad Lib song and play it?

A: Sure. I definately don't think I'm one who can say "don't play MY song" after ripping off countless people.

X: So there could be a whole bunch of people doing their own Mad Lib songs?

A: In theory that could happen.

X: So we mentioned Shoebox and Worm Quartet earlier. They've been getting airplay on "Dr. Demento." Do you see a bright future for chubby people with synthesizers?

						MOVIE: Treasure Island

I fumbled with the tap button of the starched white shirt. My hands trembled with guilty pleasure as I smoothed the shirt over my stomach and pulled up the black slacks from around my knees. There was a strange glow throughout the room, perhaps my actions were actually being smiled upon.

I frowned a bit as I passed the incense burner. I didn't particularly like it at all. In fact, I thought it was a bit absurd. To me, the purpose of the incense was to cover the foul "mystery smell" that seems so prevalent in the room of every adolescent male. I shook the thought from my head and continued towards the dresser. Clearing a few stray CDs from the top, I pulled open the top drawer and dug through the pile of socks until my hand emerged with the black silk tie. I smiled and flipped up the collar, tassing the tie over the back of my neck. As I tied it, I glanced over and made eye contact with my favorite Jack Nicholson poster. Head peering through the door, his face twisted in the famous mix of rage and dementia.

That was what I was doing now, I was hacking a big hole in life, sticking my head through, and giving the world a great big "heeeeere's Jahnnny!" I chuckled a bit at my own metaphor as neatly finishing the knot and flipping my collar down. I made my way back across the room. The computer stuck out from the corner. It was a gaudy mixture of bright blue and white plastic. Shining with the pride that only a 350mhz

X: So what did you think of the last Plan 9 show at Gilman?

J: Great, it was packed. Everyone went apeshit, and it was really fun.

X: A lot of Alameda kids were there and really got into the show. What was that like?

J: It's a great feeling. It's indescribably great.

X: So what lead up to you making the store?

J: Well, my old boss offered to sell me his store, but I wondered how easy it would be just to do one, and it was pretty easy. So I did it.

X: The first couple years, did it take some time to really learn everything?

J: Yeah, it was really hard. It still is. It's more work than you can imagine, but it's really rewarding. Any punkrock business is hard, and it's weird, but it's really satisfying when it goes well, and you make a lot of friends if you do things right.

X: What's the biggest advantage to it?

J: There's satisfying aspects that you don't think of. Like when the B-Sides had their record, they thanked me and there's photos they took that are inside the record sleeve from when they were in my store. that was pretty satisfying, you know. I never would have thought about stuff like that happening. It's gratifying when stuff like that happens. You don't think, "I'm gonna get really rich" or anything, you think well, it would be nice to do things my way" and have more of stuff that

ALL AGES: REVIEWS

(The majority of the music reviewed in this section is NOT new. I figure that and old album you haven't heard is just the same as a new one. This policy will be discarded as soon as people decide to supply me with free and/or affordable shit to review...)

Yeah, that's what I thought.)

Dead Boys- "All This and More" (1977-78)

I've always wondered why the Dead Boys weren't mentioned in the same breath as the Ramones, Pistols, and Clash. It is said that to really understand just how revolutionary those early bands were, you have to compare them with what was around at the time. I tried this, and those people are absolutely right. Compare the Dead Boys with other punk bands of the time, and you begin to see just how incredible they were.

Replacements- "Sorry Ma, Forgot to take out the Trash" (1981)

Yes, fifteen years before Paul Westerberg sank to the "Singles" soundtrack, we have the debut release from the Replacements. Which, as it turns out, is a damn fine punk album. Whether you're a youngin' looking for a history lesson or an old-timer feeling nostalgic, this one's worth a dust-off and a listen.

Fracas- "Always Drunk and Incapable of Love" (2000)

Reminding everyone that music still, in fact, exists in Alameda, we have Fracas. Like any good hardcore album, "Always Drunk and Incapable of Love" gives you that insatiable urge to break shit. It's also quite cheap: $ bucks at Axis.

Beat Farmers- "Loud and Plowed and LIVE" (1990)

Are you a Mojo Nixon fan? Have you not heard of the Beat Farmers? Shame on you, asshole! The late great Country Dick Montana co-wrote "Are You Drinkin' With Me Jesus" and the final song on this album, "King of Sleaze," features Mojo helping out with singing. All Nixon fans need to grab this one and prepare for one hell of a ride. Beware! only four or five songs on this CD have Dick doing vocals, the rest are quite classic rock/country-ish.

Toy Dolls- "Dig That Groove Baby" (1983)

What sad sack of shit doesn't love the Toy Dolls? This may have been their best album, with "Nellie The Elephant", "Firey Jack", "Dougy Giro", and without a doubt the best rendition of "Blue Suede Shoes" ever made. Buy it, listen to it, live it, and remember just how much fun Punk Rock can be.

The Queers- "Today" (2001)

The newest EP from Joe Queer & Co. Like pretty much every other Queers release, it's melodic, catchy, juvenile, and a bit raunchy all at the same time; a combination that never fails. "Today" is more or less a sampler of everything the Queers are doing these days, complete with the perennial Beach Boys cover. I'm anxiously awaiting the next Full-Length (I've heard it may be out in the fall?)

Fay Wray- "I Love Everyone" (2000)

I found this Florida band while looking through the No Idea website last summer. I've been hooked ever since. It's basically melodic punk without the ska-ish swingy crap or the emo-ish whiney shit. So, "I love everyone" is pretty much what pop-punk should be. And it gets better every time I listen to it.
